And this is NOT the sequence of the song, see below . A: Reverse the order of your "sequence" below and you'll find the correct order. (The first note you posted is the last) Let's say, you were looking for the song "Right Here Waiting" by Richard Marx. You can look it up using the.torrent website at: When you have downloaded the file, you'll see the song titles and chords at the bottom of your screen. At the top of the screen, you can see the chords.
You want to find the chords that say: "C major" Then, you'll find it by skipping to the chords that say: "Cm" You'll find a ton of chords there, but look at the first one you find: "Cm" The letters at the beginning of the chord name are the same as the order you are looking for: C, M, Am, C, D, F, Cm. That's it. In the next part of the song, you'll find another letter: G. Now, that's where the actual song sequence changes. It'll go like this: G, Cm, C, G, Cm

The next part is "C major" again, so again, it'll go like this: G, Cm, C, G, Cm, Cm You can sort of read this in music notation. You have Cm, then G, then C, then G, then Cm, then Cm, then G. You can skip the "Cm" in that song, and find the order of the song: C, G, C, G, C, G, C The last part, Cm, is not part of the song. It's from the verse that comes before. All this takes a bit of practice, but once you learn the system, it's simple. A: This is NOT the sequence of the song, see below A: For your chord and chord name notation of "Right Here Waiting" by Richard Marx the note is played and the chord name follows in the notation. It does not specify the order 2d92ce491b
