The acute and chronic toxicity of 2-(methylthio)benzimidazole (pyrithion) was investigated in rats, using standard in vivo and in vitro techniques. Acutely (2,4 and 16 mg/kg, ip), 2-(methylthio)benzimidazole significantly increased the brain levels of aspartate and glutamate but decreased those of gamma-aminobutyric acid (GABA), and D-glutamate aspartate-glutamate-GABA transaminase and choline acetyltransferase activities in the cerebellum. The chronic toxicity, after administration of 2-(methylthio)benzimidazole (2,3 and 10 mg/kg, ip) for 4 months, was investigated by histological examination and by measurement of the levels of brain norepinephrine, dopamine and GABA. No degeneration of nerve cells was found. A slight decrease of N-acetyl-beta-glucosaminidase activity and an increase in acetylcholinesterase activity were found in the sub-ependymal region in the dorsal hippocampus. 2-(Methylthio)benzimidazole may cause brain lesions, including the degeneration of glial cells. f) = f * * 3 - 6 * f * * 2 + 8 * f - 9 .
