Enantioselective recognition and catalytic enantioselective conjugate addition of carbonyl compounds to aromatic nucleophiles using a rigidified resin supported chiral amine catalyst. The use of a chiral amine catalyst supported on a flexible resin substrate, diisopropylethylamine (DIPEA) supported on poly(4-methylstyrene) (PN-DIPEA), has been applied to the enantioselective recognition and subsequent stereocontrolled addition of various aldehydes and ketones to aromatic nucleophiles such as (R)-phenylglycinol, (R)-proline and (R)-tryptophan. Under optimized conditions, a variety of aldehydes and ketones with different electronic and steric effects of the substituents were reacted in high yields (ca. 90-95%) and enantioselectivities (up to 99% ee). The bulky amines that were incorporated into the chiral
