For the purpose of this hypothetical, let's say that it appears that the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in favor of the Supreme Court's gay marriage rulings will have far-reaching consequences. Will homosexual activists use the Full Faith and Credit Clause as a remedy? Will there be a push to amend the Constitution to allow state legislatures and courts to consider such matters in their own states? Let's assume that the ruling impacts some states more than others. Let's say that the ruling is interpreted by some states to allow same-sex marriage while having no impact in other states. And let's say that the decision comes while an incumbent president is running for reelection. Let's also assume that the administration is acting in a way that could trigger a veto under the Constitution's Article II. In such a case, will activist groups, led by homosexual political and legal theorists, invoke the Full Faith and Credit Clause as a remedy? The Constitution's Full Faith and Credit Clause states that: "Full Faith and Credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts, Records, and Judicial Proceedings of every other State." Article IV, Section 1, Clause 1, provides that all state legislatures are required to pass laws to give full faith and credit to the public acts of every other state. (Note that the states are each sovereign, and thus it is possible that the U.S. Congress has the power to override a state's refusal to honor the Full Faith and Credit Clause. However, I will not discuss that possibility here.) It is generally considered that state courts and legislatures are forbidden from deciding constitutional questions. The full faith and credit clause is a bit different, so we'll get to that ba244e880a
