They were purchased and moved over to FSX in an active forum thread on the AOPA site, as such files are no longer available. The optical properties of a nano-sized anatase-rutile TiO₂ monolayer that was deposited on the surface of a poly-DL-lactide (PDLLA) film were investigated by using the optical reflectance at normal incidence. The UV-vis spectra confirmed that the PDLLA film was a TiO₂ layer approximately 200 nm thick. As the number of TiO₂ particles was increased, the optical reflectance increased, and its dependence on the incident angle became weaker. The optical reflectance of the TiO₂ monolayer on the PDLLA film at normal incidence increased to approximately 47% of the value of the TiO₂ monolayer on air when the number of TiO₂ particles was 100, and a minimum value was obtained at an incident angle of 53 degrees. ~~~ singingfish Not sure about the location, but the same thing

To be honest you can get a better handle on the look of a kit. Even with flight1's odd liveries and that old real life obsession with "silver" paint does it still truly look like real wood? Here's how to get it to really have a look the right way.. add a random runway texture that's also a plane But I am disappointed as to their. P3D is a poor choice for FSX.
