Montgomery Hicks John Montgomery Hicks (June 24, 1847 – December 28, 1905) was an American architect whose work is characterized by the use of elaborate mosaic inlay and tiling in his decorative and structural designs. Early life and career Hicks was born in the southern town of Roachdale, South Carolina, one of six children born to judge John Smith Hicks and Adie Hackett. In 1871, Hicks married Amy Berryman in South Carolina, and the couple would have eight children. Hicks was educated in the public schools of South Carolina, and also attended the State Normal School and the State College of Charleston. He would later study at the Ecole des Beaux-Arts in Paris and the Royal Academy of Fine Arts in Antwerp. In 1880 Hicks moved to Grand Rapids, Michigan, as an associate of Charles M. Woodward. Woodward and Hicks worked for a decade, first in the office of F.C. Sagebiel and later in their own partnership, Woodward & Hicks. Work in western Michigan From 1896 to 1901, Hicks designed the Larkin Administration Building for the Kalamazoo Industrial School for Girls in Kalamazoo, Michigan. It was modeled on the Haverford College in Haverford, Pennsylvania, and features a Romanesque interior design with hexagonal spires and colonnettes, a red roof, and a long row of arched windows at the roofline. From 1893 to 1900, Hicks designed several houses in the Grand Rapids area. One such house, located at 1117 North Fulton Street, in the city's Beacon Hill neighborhood, is particularly notable. It is a six-story, Italianate mansion designed in the "Queen Anne" style. It features cast iron columns and arched doorways, and first floor windows which framed a set of wreaths. Hicks would later remodel the home into a nine-story, 118-room hotel, the Grand Rapids Parliament House. From 1900 to 1901, Hicks designed the six-story, steel-frame Rutz Printing Company Building at 208-10 East Market Street in the city ba244e880a
