A 23-year-old man was admitted to the emergency room for chest pain. He had had unstable angina pectoris one year previously. Coronary angiography revealed 90% stenosis of the right coronary artery and 80% stenosis of the left anterior descending coronary artery. Although he underwent coronary angioplasty and stenting, anginal attacks continued and he was transferred to our hospital for surgical treatment. He was on hemodialysis for chronic renal failure. On admission, chest pain was aggravated, and troponin T value was elevated. Echocardiography showed hypokinesis of the left ventricular posterior wall and septum. Immediately after coronary intervention, the left ventricular function was normalized. He had no history of hypertension, diabetes mellitus or congenital heart disease. Therefore, the mechanism of the myocardial dysfunction was considered to be spasm of the coronary artery. Myocardial dysfunction was reversible as a result of coronary angioplasty. This case demonstrates that the myocardial dysfunction in acute coronary syndrome is not only due to the ischemic necrosis but also to the coronary artery spasm.This Is Us The families of Game of Thrones and the Americans are now forced to meet in a tournament of epic proportions, and this time only one can win. 2d92ce491b
