I want to ask a question about the Ethical Hacking question / answer that's currently locked and on the hot questions list. I've seen similar questions about other aspects of the software industry (e.g. open source, self-employed) and have never been opposed to such questions as long as the ones I've seen were not duplicate. Do questions about the "unethical" aspects of a profession (as opposed to some sort of practical ethical dilemma, which may be the reason for calling in an ethical hacker) belong on SO? I'm sure there are people who would say yes, and other people who would say no, but for the sake of completeness, should we (re)consider this to be on-topic? A: I'd suggest the questions are on-topic because they touch on the sort of questions that tend to be asked by practitioners. For example: "Does this time I ask this question of a colleague make me a bad ethical hacker?" "This is a legitimately funny prank I'm considering pulling on my boss." "I'm about to be assaulted by a hacker who I don't know who he is. How can I defend myself?" All of these are questions that I would expect an ethical hacker to ask of a client, colleague, or potential victim, and they're on-topic because they tend to come up in a professional context. The same sort of questions come up in academic settings, as well. Some people think that the correct approach is to be as "objective" as possible, in which case questions like "How should I respond to a request to commit a security violation?" are less interesting. Others think the correct approach is to say "No, not if you know what you're doing." In both cases, they're on-topic because they tend to come up in a professional context. So I think they fit the profile, and are a good fit for Programmers. Just 2d92ce491b
