While the company has already unveiled Windows Phone 8, it's introducing the operating system to the world on February 26. Microsoft CEO Steve Ballmer detailed the event on Twitter. He also said that the company would be announcing some more about Windows Phone 8 next week. Let's expect some specifics about the new Windows Phone 8 release, pricing and availability of the OS for smartphones. Windows Phone 8 uses a modified version of the Windows NT Kernel and a new user interface. The UI is inspired by Windows Phone 7 with new tiles and fonts. The operating system also includes support for personal assistant Cortana from Microsoft as well as the company's Live Tiles, which can be used to receive messages, e-mails and notifications from social networks. According to BGR, Windows Phone 8 will also include a new app called OneNote, which is being billed as a universal note-taking application. It can be accessed from your Windows Phone 8 and Windows 8 PCs and laptops. So what do you think about Windows Phone 8? Let us know your thoughts in the comments below. "Oh, my goodness!" she exclaimed. "What a lovely milestone!" In fact, she had not been particularly fond of the number 100, because the last time she had taken a test that measured her age, she had been 100 years old. In her mind, this made her the oldest person in the world — and she was very upset to learn that the number actually exceeded hers. It is a sad state of affairs when one can reach the ripe old age of 100 with the understanding that one has passed out of the "centenarian" club. Few people remain in this club for very long — there are only 2d92ce491b
