Gus-Sot; what's the output of: `cat /proc/cpuinfo | grep 'model name'` 1.8 GHz i5, 6 core with hyperthreading 2.5 GHz i7, 8 core with hyperthreading ok, that's intel, with a hw mapper that supports `cpufreq` and is `smp` capable. then you should be able to use the power profile from the bios, in some cases this can also be done from within the running operating system. tomreyn: yes, the cooling fan does change frequencies to lower. when I put my hand over it it does go down to 1.5 GHz. but, is not that really good at it? the fans on my laptop go up to almost 85°C, so I'm very worried. Gus-Sot: you can also adjust / control / fine-tune the cpu frequency by using the `cpu_policy` kernel parameter, but this is only available if you booted from the live ubuntu installer. `!info linux-image-generic xenial linux-image-generic` (source: linux-meta): Generic Linux kernel image. In component main, is optional. Version 4.4.0.105.108 (xenial), package size 2 kB, installed size 13 kB Gus-Sot: it's still not ideal, but if your issue is really CPU overheating then this may help. so I would be able to adjust that from linux only? Gus-Sot: probably, yes. i'm not entirely sure. I will try in the next few minutes, I will come back on line. tomreyn: all the bios settings are all set, the temperature is really high and it happens also when I use other applications. Gus-Sot: can you please run this: `sudo lshw -C cpu | nc termbin.com 9999`

Save 50% with 5 electronic music sound pools in one collection! Dark electro sounds more than on. We already wrote about the world's first collection of electronic tracks (however, still without the names of the authors of the tracks), released on vinyl. Today we present to your attention another compilation called Dark-Economy, which is also available on vinyl. However, it is also available on CD, but it will not be possible to purchase it on CD. The collection Dark-Economy contains five tracks with experimental electronic music. And all of them are somehow connected with the entertainment industry.
