In the year 2019, we are no longer limited by RFC compliance for the payment gateway industry. We have entered a brave new world of blockchain driven, immutable, financial privacy, and of course, ether – the digital money of the Internet. When building your own crypto currency, you have three options. Option 1: Just use Ether. This might be the only option. Ether is inexpensive (less than $100 per Ether), and you can get started on a testnet wallet today for your own private testing. Don't stop there though. Once you've tested and understood Ether and blockchain-based technologies, you should take the next step and create your own testnet and launch a smart contract that can provide a coupon. Option 2: Use an existing solution. There are many pre-built solutions for option 2. My recommendation is to use an existing offering from a centralized payment gateway provider such as Stripe, Coinbase, or Balanced which already has millions of users. The privacy of these providers is debatable, but at least you know your user data is safe with an 3ef4e8ef8d
