Due to the lack of sufficient pre-employment, pre-experience or internship opportunities, by default, high school students are not interested in competing for full-time work. We have the choice either to simply finish high school with the hope that a real job will be available at some point, or start looking for work sooner, with a hope that eventually a job will be available. Obviously, since most of the big companies prefer hiring candidates who are already settled in the area and have more work experience, it's always better for the job seekers to find an internship or work experience position. This way, they will have more chances of getting hired full-time. There are also a lot of companies that offer great benefits in exchange for a working experience. Some of the most common benefits include tuition assistance, working allowance and paid leave. During the internship period, the employer pays your salary, usually on a monthly basis. This means that, in addition to the working experience, the employer provides you with room and board, equipment, transportation and other expenses. Also, this type of work allows you to build a network of contacts with both employers and coworkers. Because many employers are looking for people with experience and specific skills, you can focus your efforts on getting to know the company and its employees. It will help you build a strong relationship with them, which may give you a good shot at being offered a full-time position if you're selected for the job. Additionally, working in the office allows you to improve your English skills, which will be valuable not only for your future job, but also when looking for work after your internship. By working for an extended period of time, you will also build up contacts that can help you in your
