Q: Chrome is having weird issues with sites Today, chrome has started giving some really weird issues. Today I tried to refresh a page and all of a sudden everything loaded really slowly. The problem is that is not isolated to a single page, if I open google chrome, then open the web developer extension to navigate to google.com then the entire web freezes. So then I open IE and try to go to google.com and IE freezes as well. The whole computer is having issues. When trying to go to chrome's settings, I can't get to the settings page at all and the options menu is just black. This seems like a major problem, is this a common issue? Can I fix this or can I even download a new version of chrome? A: Chrome has been having a lot of issues the last couple of days. I wouldn't say it's due to browser updates but rather the fact that it's going through a beta test right now. You can update your browser by updating the one on your computer to the newest version or you can switch to another browser like Firefox or Internet Explorer. If that doesn't work for you then you will have to get a hold of a different computer. Search This Blog Posts

Word of warning; this is a bit of a rant. In a recent post I mentioned that I have to resort to wearing a form fitting bikini (the important thing was that I was in a form fitting bikini, not that it was a form fitting bikini, in case that caused any confusion). While I was speaking I thought that it was a good idea to draw a quick sketch of my body in order to explain what I meant, and perhaps explain my past posts about slimness. So here is a sketch of me: Not bad; not great either. The reason I am embarrassed about this is because I had no idea what I was supposed to wear on my torso, i.e. how I was supposed to look when I was wearing a bikini. I was just happy to be wearing a bikini at all, and hoped that I was safe to go outside in a bikini. This picture did not inspire confidence in me; but I was hesitant to go out in my currently bloated state so there was little I could do at this time. This is the part where I would normally
