The retinas of two brothers, aged 10 and 23, with retinitis pigmentosa and a positive family history were examined by light and electron microscopy. The pericentral retinal pigment epithelium (RPE) of both eyes was strongly pigmented and markedly reduced in height. The number of sensory cells was only moderately reduced in the older brother. The RPE was also greatly reduced in number and degenerated throughout most of the retina of the younger brother. Photoreceptor outer segments were absent, inner segments were reduced in size and the nuclei contained dark
