We study the determination of the number of subjects with a certain property in a population based on the outcome of the marginal binomial distribution. This problem is generally addressed in the literature by taking the limit of a normal number of success. We develop the approach to the binomial aggregation problem of Cramer. We show that Cramer and a frequentist statistician can calculate the same value if they solve a consistent set of likelihood equations. The value can be derived from the Fisher information or from the profile log-likelihood. In some cases, the derivations provide intuitive illustrations of the practical calculation of the value in the frequentist approach. Update: please refer to this blog post for further informations, too. Sorry for the inconvenience. As you may know, Debian 9 (Stretch) is scheduled for release on July 29, 2016. Although this release is based on Debian 8 (jessie), that doesn't mean that all packages had to go through the same migration process as Debian 8 (non-LTS).
