A new company has released their Logitrace V12, a logitrace v12 portable. Mobile version of Logitrace,. Download Logitrace.click to enlarge Chase “Wu-Tang” Carter Dirty Slacks Heard from the artist, they are signed now. "I probably will turn in my whipcords, canvas, wood etc when I'm ready. I do draw on wood but maybe not anymore, can't do certain drawing devices like a pen. I may release a box set or something eventually like I'm planning to with O. They're back in the shop as of yesterday." Click through the gallery below to view some of Carter's work. Shannon Hembrough, cofounder of Mad Art Lab, has been producing original prints of good-for-your-eyes cleavage from New Orleans' signature street artist since 2010. Hembrough's line originally consisted of all-too-briefly-stocking-clothes renditions from popular songs. In 2012, she upped the ante by serving up more than 20 prints of "The Nigella Lawson: The Real Nigella Lawson," plus some variations.The artist initially approached Hembrough on behalf of her partner, Nicolas "O" Avondet, who heard of the prints on the radio. Until then, Hembrough never had a serious approach to selling the work. Her connection with Avondet took her to the next level."I really was just trying to support him," said Hembrough, speaking in her studio/gallery on the Avenue in the Lower Garden District in New Orleans. "I was with him, and we were living together, so he would talk and I would listen." Soon after Avondet, then 26 years old, first introduced Hembrough to Carter, the two became fast friends, keeping in touch via Facebook. The three discussed how it would be best to proceed with the series, which Hembrough agreed to think about.Carter had noticed Hembrough's prints at the studio of Avondet, when he'd first popped in to check on his friend. The two artists became fast friends and decided to team up. Hembrough has done work from Carter's company, The Wu-Tang, and she had seen some other drawings he had done, which greatly appealed to her. After much talk, Carter agreed to help her produce prints."It's something totally different," Hembrough said of
