The first is that the two governments must establish an extradition treaty. Given the litigious nature of the U.S.A. citizens, it is probable that such a treaty will only be established after the Edward Snowden scandal. The second problem is that it may be difficult to ensure that the person arrested and charged in another country will be tried for any crime that the extraditee committed in the country where the arrest occurred. Indeed, a U.S. businessman in Saudi Arabia, accused of embezzling funds from his company, was extradited to the U.S. and then was charged with wire fraud, which is a much less serious offense, and he was then found not guilty because of lack of jurisdiction. In some cases, obtaining extradition is more a political matter than a legal one. For example, the U.S. sent murder suspect Anna Elizabeth Alm, an African, to Australia on a technicality when the investigators had no evidence connecting her to the crime. She was ultimately deported back to the U.S. A treaty is only as strong as its weakest link. Even a treaty that is well thought out could become unenforceable. It is much more difficult, however, to dismiss a treaty than to nullify a contract. The problem with extradition treaties is that they place the burden of proof on the person who is accused.I have been a volunteer in my church youth group for over six years. We will finish this up next week. What made me sit up and say, “Hey! This might be a good time for our next conversation with God.”? I stumbled upon this verse yesterday. I certainly didn’t realize it took place this long ago. My friend, Erich Bochner, posted it on twitter this morning. This verse is an exhortation 3da54e8ca3
