Ref: kyoto-2018 Dated 7 September 2018 Dear Colleagues, I am pleased to be writing to update you on the latest developments in relation to the invitation issued on 8 July 2018, by the International Olympic Committee (IOC) to tender for the right to host the Tokyo 2020 Olympic and Paralympic Games. Despite some very impressive responses, we are no longer in a position to be able to give a detailed response at this time regarding the opportunity to deliver a bid that meets the requirements outlined in the invitation. As the consideration of responses had been clearly stated to be confidential, we would not be able to discuss them at this stage. However, we are in a position to outline the changes that have been made to the timetable for the formal entry stage, and the commitment we have made to address the issues outlined in the invitation. This information was published in the IOC's invitation and in the Official Notice of the formal entry stage published on 16 September 2018, and further details are provided in the timeline, below, which we are making available for your review. It is important to stress that the response to the IOC's invitation, which we received in August 2018, contains sufficient material for an independent report, which

Q: How to debug django oscar import errors How to debug django oscar import errors Unable to import application "app" Error was: No module named "polls" Error was: No module named "django.contrib.auth" A: I will create a script called oscar-import to make your life easier: First do: python manage.py oscar import app and from the command line (terminal): python oscar-import.py When importing apps like this, there will be no tracebacks etc, simply exit the script with ctrl+c the case of BLEU [papineni-etal-2002], recall that this quantity is not a standardised evaluation metric and that it is made up of averaged per-token scores. For example, when the model predicts a specific word, it is not expected to obtain a large score if it is substituted in the input by one of high TF-IDF/IDF score. The scores in BLEU are averaged, so the loss of one word will not penalise the averaging process of all the words. In addition, the BLEU score is not perfectly correlated with the evaluation language model results. For instance, the small number of test sentences in the Mihalcea et al. test set [mihalcea-etal-2007] causes an evaluation language model to err and generate large BLEU score.

Q: Searching for substring in multi-million row table in Oracle using Java I have a table that has like 1.2 million rows and I am trying to filter it through a function so that I can select the records that have a certain sub-string in a string-field. The string field may also contain the sub-string, and thus there can be a few records that contain the sub-string in the field. Is there a better way to implement this than a single query in which I add up all the sub-strings and filter on the new column? For example I am filtering on the field LINE_DATE which can be of this form: 20101101:20100201 20101201:20100401 I would like to return all the records that contain the sub-string 20100201. A: You can use regular expression matching to find those records. It will be faster than an index scan, and this is something Oracle can do efficiently. For example: select * from yourtable where regexp_like (line_date, '^20100201$'); You might be interested in Oracle's full text search features, too, if you don't want to use regular expression matching. A: You have to index the column. That is the simplest method, but requires time to scan the table. Alternatively, you can use Hibernate/JPA and a query with a native query to perform a regular expression search for you. In this scenario, you may only need to index a particular column or columns, and the text searches are slower. that I am to get to the top. My climb up to the summit—highest point of the climb—leaves the rest of my life unblemished. I don't think about my family or my friends or the bills, the fact that we are one family in this world. My climb up the mountain is all there is. I think about how come I can do this? Why is the air so clear? Why am I not afraid? Why can I feel all the weight of the climbing, of the mountains and the sky, hanging over me, and I'm not sad? Why is the day so clean and bright? Why am I now sure I will have a sleep in this world? The lightness is not an illusion.
