Introduction to Photoshop The core workflow of Photoshop is simple: Create a document Create layers Create a new layer Create a new raster image (e.g. JPG, PNG, TIFF, GIF, etc.) Create a selection A selection can be made by anything, i.e. you can select objects and curves, shapes, and even parts of a photo Canvas Layers CreativeSuite.com CEO, Brett Worley, says, "There are more than 100 layers in the latest version of Photoshop. You can add more, delete them, change the blend modes or opacity for each layer individually." The layers can all be edited and moved around on the document. "In Photoshop, there are four basic kinds of layers: the background, the foreground, the adjustment and the selection." Worley continues, "Now, there are a total of 12 kinds of layers, the most common being the adjustment layers and layer masks." Different Layer Modes When you have a layer open, you are given two choices to work on the layer: Overlaid (layer above the layer below) or Normal (layer below the layer below) Blend Modes (layer over the layer below) or Overlay (layer below the layer below) In addition, you can set opacity for each layer Adjustment Layers Adj. Layers, also called adjustments, are used for fine-tuning specific aspects of the image. These layers have six different types: Curves Adjustment Layer Levels Curves Adjustment Layer Color Curves Adjustment Layer Lightness Curves Adjustment Layer Hue/Saturation Adjustment Layer Black/White Adjustment Layer Color Balance Adjustment Layer Colorize Adjustment Layer Image Levels Adjustment Layer Vibrance Adjustment Layer Saturation Adjustment Layer Color Reduce/Lighten Active Adjustment Layer An active adjustment layer may be created with a button in the Layers palette, or you can activate it via Layer > Create New Adjustment Layer. The adjustment layer gives you the option to use adjustment layers to manipulate the colors, brightness and contrast or create a look unique to your image. Active adjustment layers can be edited, which will affect the active layers below it. Once you are done, it is best to delete the adjustment layer to avoid tampering with others. Layer Masks Layer Masks are used to limit or restrict what can

In the following tutorial we will provide you with an overview of the core features of Photoshop Elements and how to use it to create your own brand new images. We'll teach you how to create your own branded logo. What is Photoshop Elements? Adobe Photoshop Elements comes as an updated version of Adobe Photoshop. Photoshop Elements was introduced in 2008 and is still the number one choice for home and students photographers. While Photoshop has had major updates and enhancements throughout the years, Photoshop Elements has not. Photoshop Elements is designed for photographers, graphic designers, web designers, and hobbyists. It is a graphic editor for photographers, image editors and hobbyists. But it does come with a wide range of photo editing tools to allow users to edit their own photos and create professional quality images. Photoshop Elements still includes most of the features from the mainstream version, but it is not as complex to use as Photoshop. That is why Photoshop Elements is suitable for beginners. It provides a simpler user interface to allow those with beginner skills to quickly start editing their own images without having to learn how to navigate a complex software and it keeps most of the professional features. You can use Photoshop Elements on a wide range of platforms including Mac, Windows and iPad. The easiest way to run Photoshop Elements is on a PC with a processor, memory and operating system suitable for video editing and photo editing. You can use Photoshop Elements on the following operating systems: Mac OS X Windows Linux For more information about using Photoshop Elements click here. Now she's suing her former bosses. An off-duty cop accused of repeatedly punching a teenage girl in the face during a nasty sidewalk dispute is set to go to trial next month on assault charges. Alexandria Nieves Hernandez filed the lawsuit in Queens Supreme Court on Tuesday against Benjamin Turner — the top cop at the 120th precinct in Elmhurst, just north of Jackson Heights — and the city's Department of Correction. She's claiming Turner — who was off-duty and not in uniform at the time — threw her to the ground and punched her three times in the face and body when she confronted him last year outside a relatives-only social club she was frequenting on the corner of 103rd Street and 76th Avenue. A video shot by Hernandez's husband and posted on YouTube showed the young girl — who was just a few inches taller than the NYPD officer's 6-foot-3 frame — lunging at him. But the lawsuit argues Turner, a source of public humiliation for his department, made the situation worse by publicly accusing Hernandez of violating a "no touch" rule which banned him from having contact with members of the public. "The only contact that defendant Turner had with the plaintiff … was at the time that he punched her in the face and body and threw her to the ground in the middle of the intersection," the suit says. Hernandez, who was 17 at the time, suffered a fractured nose, a fractured cheekbone, a closed-head injury and a concussion, according to the complaint. The teen's mom, Ilona Colmenares, is suing the city and NYPD for failing to protect her daughter. As Hernandez tried to walk home after the clash, Turner allegedly "nudged" her backside and made her turn around to face him before slamming her to the ground. Turner had been issuing Hernandez a summons for not providing proof of ID when she was asked to produce a badge at the social club, the complaint says. Hernandez had no record of past arrests, but her mother said last month that she was known to "cuss at people and act rowdy." A spokeswoman for the mayor's office said Thursday the city couldn't comment. A source close to the NYPD said the department "is aware of the complaint and we are looking

IDD News Classes resume on Monday Right now, the Prep Center at the Garden Ridge School of the Arts is like any other building at a school. But in just two months, the building will be filled with students. At the beginning of the summer, students will move into the facility to complete their 12th-grade year at the Garden Ridge School of the Arts, one of 10 high schools in Polk County. The new location is the previous home of Whiteville High School, which served students from grades six through 12. "It's a totally new building," said high school principal Dr. Kenny Cox. "The hard part for us is, how do we transition our current students, and how do we teach them here? We would be remiss if we tried to do it in the same way we've done it in the past." Cox said his focus is to teach the students enough about academics to give them a chance, but not so much that they will be bored. "We want to push them to learn more than they've ever learned in the past," Cox said. "We want them to be exposed to the things they've never been exposed to." Cox and high school art teacher Kelly Sumpter worked together to determine what would be required. They decided that the school would be a dual enrollment program. "It's going to be very challenging in the beginning," Cox said. "We're not going to take anything for granted." During their first four years at Whiteville High School, students completed the dual enrollment program, where they attended regular classes at the high school and classes at Whiteville Community College. Jasmine Fleson, a senior art teacher at Whiteville High School, said the program is beneficial to both high school students and community college students, because many of the courses have the same assignments. "There is so much stuff that you're learning," Fleson said. "You get two years of college in one year. It really works well because the high school graduates receive their high school diploma and then they automatically earn their associate's degree." Melissa Davis, a sophomore at Garden Ridge, said she is looking forward to completing the next step
