When working with Photoshop Elements, you will use the Paint and Edit commands. In this part we look at the Paint and Edit commands which are at the heart of the software. We go over these in detail with examples from the menus and our experience of using the Paint and Edit commands. The Paint and Edit commands are similar across Elements versions. Adobe Photoshop Elements 10 and below have a simpler paint and edit menu. Elements 11 and later is more similar to the professional version of Photoshop. The menus are the same and you can switch between them. Most of the items you can do in Elements 10 and below are not available in Elements 11 and later. The Paint command contains the Brush command, which contains your Brush tool. You can select and modify the brush tool in a similar way to the Paint and Edit commands. The Edit command contains the Selection, Move and Transform commands. We'll cover each in turn. Brush The Brush command has all of the same options as the professional version of Photoshop. All the brushes that have a purpose in Photoshop also have a purpose in Elements. Brush Settings With your cursor over a brush, a small button appears with options for all the brush settings. Click on this button to get a list of all brushes and a description of each. This small button is also seen under many of the dialog options in the menus below. Brush Tool You can use many of the same tools in Elements that you use in Photoshop. You can access the same tools by pressing 'B' on the keyboard. The figure below shows the Brush tool. This is a more versatile version of the Photoshop Brush tool. You can use these tools to make many effects, including duplicating and masking. Brush Quick Tips Brush Size Brush size affects how much paint is used on an image. Larger brushes make bigger images. Brush Opacity Brush opacity affects how opaque you want the paint to be. Lower opacity makes the paint more transparent. Brush Pressure Brush pressure affects the rate at which the paint is applied to an image. The brush pressure speed can be set for different image types or when you want to slow down your editing. Brush Mix Brush mix controls the amount of the original image and the amount of paint used. (CNN) The US Defense Department's innovation agency has partnered with researchers from Google and NASA to use machine learning to track a type of infectious bacteria that can cause food poisoning. The solution is part of a government program called the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency (DARPA) Genomics Exoskeletal Integration Program, which is exploring ways to enable soldiers to conduct surgery on the battlefield without exposing them to danger. The tech works by combining convolutional neural networks, a type of artificial intelligence, with genomics to enhance an infection treatment model called Mobile Army Surgical Hospital-Absorbable Mesh (MASH-A) "We have solved problems that have been very expensive to solve on the battlefield that can now be addressed at a smaller and much lower cost with artificial intelligence," said Miles Slavin, the deputy director of DARPA. The genomics program is working to determine whether using biological data can improve the prediction of antibiotic resistance in bacteria, particularly MRSA, or methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus, as well as other pathogens such as anthrax. The machines want to also determine "early warning signals of antibiotic failure," said co-founder Mark Rocha, who describes the challenge as identifying diagnostic markers "in time to identify them." "The use of biological data in this manner may be able to combat antibiotic resistance," he added. "It could also identify new anti-bacterial drugs that can eradicate resistant bugs without inciting resistance." In research conducted earlier this year, the pair built an artificial intelligence system using machine learning and genomics to help inform the selection of a drug that is effective against MRSA, Slavin said. The problem is MRSA is a dangerous and costly threat for military and civilian healthcare institutions worldwide, according to Slavin. "When the drug is used, it will also be useful in reducing the risk of wound infection when an operation is performed on a soldier while on the battlefield," he said. Research suggests that MRSA can survive in wounds left untreated for up to nine days because the organism is able to use the patient's own immune system to protect itself from the antibiotics used to kill it. The technical solution to the problem is to help a MASH-A patient that is infected with MRSA, and one of the top killers of servicemen and women in the US military, to detect the presence of MRSA bacteria in their wounds before the infection develops

[Peripheral nervous system ganglioneurofibroma]. Ganglioneuromas belong to benign peripheral nerve sheath tumours. They are usually asymptomatic, and present no malignant potential. We report a case of a ganglioneurofibroma of the right foot, identified by a 7-year-old girl who presented with a two-year history of swelling of the right foot. Radiological examination revealed a pedunculated, soft-tissue mass. A biopsy yielded a diagnosis of ganglioneurofibroma. This case report is one of the few we found in the literature.delta; //[--] //[Deprecated function]
