Photoshop continues to evolve, not only in features and creative potential, but also in the ever-expanding range of products that can be used to work with the program. Many applications designed to work with Photoshop stand as a companion for those working in the program. To date, many of Photoshop's great tools can be found in Adobe Creative Suite 3 (CS3) and Lightroom 2.0. In this chapter, we introduce you to Photoshop's tools and how they work together. We also guide you through the basics of the program and the process of how to use Photoshop to enhance images that were taken with a digital camera. * * * # Photoshop CS3, Lightroom 2.0, and other Key Features Adobe Photoshop CS3 represents a major leap forward for those who edit images, enabling users to more precisely manipulate color, create 3-D effects, and create custom page layouts. Among the many new features of Photoshop CS3: * New sophisticated tools for design and printing: The Canvas tool enables you to work in the approximate proportions of a printed page. Built-in object and picture frame selection tools and a new Puppet Warp feature let you easily manipulate the edges of an object. The Print dialog enables you to specify the output size and print media type as you work. * Designed to work with Adobe Lightroom 2.0: Lightroom 2.0 provides a new workflow for photographers. It integrates with Photoshop CS3 to provide a unified photoshopping environment. Lightroom's unique features enable your images to be viewed or viewed at the same time, while the Camera Raw dialog enables you to edit color using the same settings you use in Adobe Camera Raw. You can adjust settings in Lightroom or Camera Raw — and then export the image back into the Camera Raw dialog for further editing. Figure 1-1 shows what the new interface looks like when you work in Photoshop CS3. Also in this release, Photoshop can now run in 64-bit mode. In earlier versions, you could choose the 32-bit or 64-bit option when you first started up the program. CS3 enables you to choose whether to use all 64 bits or half that amount of memory when working with an image. * New Print dialog: The Print dialog simplifies creation of output files in Photoshop. Instead of exporting your image to a separate Photoshop file and then using other tools to resize and print, you can just export

Oracle is seeking to acquire UnboundID, a Canadian company that licenses data-protection and identity management software, for $75 million. The transaction, announced today in a news release by Oracle, would extend the high-profile software maker's reach into a market whose growth has been driven in recent years by the increasing popularity of mobile devices and other connected technologies. UnboundID is a major player in a market where cash is flowing and more and more organizations are finding it necessary to protect the privacy of their employees' data and create a central "authentication and identity" system. UnboundID's offering is called UnboundID ID Connect, and it competes with the market leader, Ping Identity, which was bought by Cisco in 2010 for an undisclosed sum. At its core, UnboundID's product is a "middleware" software package, but its solutions are specifically designed to protect sensitive data in a mobile environment. Its technology allows corporations to build their own identity systems from the ground up, rather than being forced to use off-the-shelf solutions. UnboundID contends that its identity system requires less initial time and money, and is more adaptable, than any other. Traditional identity systems that rely on users creating and managing their own identities are gaining in popularity, as that approach offers more flexibility and a degree of security. But that creates more work for users, who must store personal information and remember unique identifiers as well as passwords. UnboundID's software lets companies minimize the need for users to do this, allowing access to multiple systems through a single set of user credentials. It also allows for exchange of information across systems -- something not permitted under a typical identity system. UnboundID's software is supposed to make it easy for users to access and use corporate data on all kinds of mobile devices. It can be used to give users access to data on desktops or laptops; it also is designed to work well with tablet PCs. The company said it has been downloaded more than 1,000 times since its beta-version launch in 2008. In an interview, UnboundID chief executive Vivek Chadha said the software is designed to manage sensitive data -- everything from credit card information, to corporate intellectual property, to medical records. UnboundID But the fact that it protects sensitive data doesn't mean it is secure. Chadha said his company's software is not to be trusted for creating sensitive data, or for storing

The IN-180 prevents the passage of data through a full duplex port The IN-180 prevents the passage of data through a full duplex port ECCO Professional P/N IN-180 also provides protection from poor connection Anyone who has worked with computer equipment knows that it can be a problem to plug and unplug devices. Why? It happens all the time, during which the wrong data is sent or not. It may be because of poor connections and misaligned jumper cables, or even short circuits. Today I was doing a project, when suddenly one of my modules started sending data continuously in an overflow. It did not generate an error or stop the module, it just continued doing what it was doing before. I used another module connected to the same port to see that the data was still correct, before removing the module from the network. Later I discovered that the socket had been clogged with dust, which is the most probable cause of this problem. The IN-180 is just what we need. It is a simple device, which you can easily install between the port and the Ethernet/PC. It is very small, only 40 mm in length, but having only one pin. When the power cable is plugged into the unit and put into operation, it will stop the flow of data. When you unplug the cable, the unit will turn off to prevent the module from sending any more data. The IN-180 has a power consumption of only a few watts, so you can use the power plug of almost any device (from a computer to a mobile phone). You can plug up to four modules in one port, but what about 10, 20, 30? It is pretty easy. All you need is to place the switching devices between the port and the Ethernet. It is also very easy to establish a DMZ (Demilitarized Zone) in a network. $* 3 - f * * 2 - f - 1$. C a l c u l a t e - $2 * b (d) - 3 * i (d)$. - $d * * 3 + 2$
