... A: This is the standard for the extension of a compressed filename. It is likely that the actual extension depends on how the file was compressed, but regardless of which extension is assumed for your, it always contains ".Z", and it's likely that it's the same for all the files you've compressed. You can (and should) use the archive utility "unzip" to decompress. Since the ".Z" is present in the name, a simple call to dir should reveal the name of the file. unzip foo.zip (Assuming foo.zip contains the file foo which is compressed with zip) This is the standard for the extension of a compressed filename. Cancer of the larynx is a frequent disease in developed countries and its incidence has been rising over the past two decades in the United States. Tissue diagnosis offers the most accurate and necessary information for planning for therapy and patient prognosis; however, it is invasive and requires considerable skill and experience. A novel noninvasive technique, brush cytology, has been developed to sample lesions of the larynx. This report describes our experience with this new method for diagnosing laryngeal lesions. Brush cytology was performed on the vocal folds of 42 larynx lesions with vocal fold lesions. The final diagnosis was made by endoscopic biopsy or surgical biopsy. Brush cytology diagnosis was concordant with the final diagnosis in 11 of the 12 patients. Two false-negative and five false-positive brush cytology diagnoses were made and five other patients had insufficient material. The sensitivity and specificity of brush cytology were 85% and 88%, respectively. Brush cytology is sensitive and specific for the diagnosis of vocal fold lesions. It is a simple, inexpensive, painless, and safe noninvasive technique and thus deserves further investigation.
