It is a container format similar to that used by zip and zip64, but with a number of additional features. It can compress and decompress just about any type of file. A RAR file has a central directory, a group of RAR files have a central group, and a set of ZIP files have a zip file (the zip file has a central directory and is also the root of the central group). RAR files are sometimes called rar files, rar archives, or rar files. It is distributed under the GNU General Public License v3. RAR stands for Raster ARchive. It was not developed as a replacement for the ZIP file format, and the two formats have many differences. For more details, see here.
