According to our Office, the Law applies to all territorial waters, including the sea, exclusive economic zones, and continental shelf, with some of its provisions limited only to those islands that are part of the Member States. The Law will have consequences for the protection of the seas, at both the regional and global level. It will determine the legal framework for actions carried out in accordance with the Convention on Biological Diversity and the Convention on the Law of the Sea. It will strengthen the commitments given by all States under the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea in the context of the proposed universal moratorium on new extractive activities and the reform of the management regimes for existing and future extraction activities, and it will establish a mechanism for sharing the benefits of the seas. The text was approved unanimously by the Sub-Commission on the Law of the Sea (CSLS) on March 19, 2009, by a vote of 30 to none, with one abstention. The recommended changes on the table today have been made as a result of the talks of the Sub-Commission, which was organized by the European Commission and took place in late 2010, in order to achieve a balance between the opinions of developing countries, in particular, and those of the developed countries and the United States. The Law addresses the following issues: Regional and global governance The Law will increase the legal standing of the coastal states, integrating them into the United Nations system. It will also provide for a series of binding rules and rules of the game governing the activities carried out under the aegis of the United Nations in the context of the Maritime Delimitation and Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf. In regard to territorial waters and continental shelf, the Law will constitute a multilateral instrument establishing the conditions of conduct in accordance with the law of the sea. In this regard, States will be responsible for the construction of the artificial structures and installations (the continental shelves) and the bathymetry that they build or cause to be built. Sustainable Development The Law will provide for a number of principles and objectives that have
