Forwards a client from the given network or IP to a specified host. The client is able to change to the specified host if it can't connect from the given network or IP. If host argument is specified, the forwarded connection should be made on the given host. If no address argument is specified, the connection should be made on the current network or IP. By default, the specified address and host argument are ignored. It is allowed to change to the same host and to the same network if there are no open connections. The host and address arguments must be given in the format `://` (e.g., or in the form `://`, may be an IP address or a host name. The host and address may be in the form `://`, where is any of DNS, LDAP, NIS, RADIUS, LDAP, WINS and DNS. However, it is not possible to change the host without closing the connection. If the given address is an IP address, the corresponding host should be specified with the host argument. It is not possible to set a port on the forward action. This command is used to change an IP address in a running tunnel. The old tunnel is deleted, and a new tunnel with the new IP address is created. The host argument is ignored if specified. See the "EXAMPLES" section below for an example. `echo "Changing host and address on VPN connecton tunnel to " ipsec 2001:DB8::2:0 echo "Changing host and address on VPN connecton tunnel to "` ipsec
