Venezuelan players give their support to the Caracas Metropolitan Police following criticism by the police for not performing during the Copa America Caracas Metropolitan Police (MPC) suffered a huge shock on Wednesday after their players refused to play against Colombia during Venezuela's second game of the Copa America. The decision follows a controversial statement made by MPC head Luis Perez last week, in which he criticised the players for not having enough enthusiasm, adding that they were hiding at the back of the team bus. MPC's players, who have been training with their heads still covered in the Venezuelan colours, are adamant that they had no plans to miss the match, given they have enough motivation. Despite the fact that several players, such as Carmelo Alvarez, Giovanni Moreno and Diego Rossi, have publicly backed the police chiefs, others like Alvaro Marquez and Carlos Fierro, have come out in support of the Caracas Metropolitan Police and have even criticized the current media coverage. The Caracas Metropolitan Police have been met with criticism by their own media and even the opposition following their decision to skip the Colombia match on Wednesday. Venezuela are currently top of Group D and are hoping to improve their performance if they can qualify for the knockout stages of the tournament.
