Stromal-cell based cell therapy using bone marrow derived stromal cells (MSCs) is effective for bone repair in preclinical animal models. However, its efficacy in clinical application is limited. We previously reported that osteoinductive ability of bone marrow-derived stromal cells was enhanced by coculturing with bone marrow stromal cells (BMSCs) in a cell-to-cell contact manner. In the present study, we prepared BMSCs from long bones of neonatal beagles and prepared canine bone marrow stromal cells (cBMSCs). The cBMSCs expressed MSC markers such as CD29, CD90, and CD105, and did not express hematopoietic markers such as CD34, CD45, CD11b, CD14, and CD117. The cBMSCs showed MSC-like multipotentiality, including the differentiation to adipocytes, osteocytes, and chondrocytes. In addition, the cBMSCs showed higher osteoinductive potential than human BMSCs by coculturing with osteogenic-lineage cells in a cell-to-cell contact manner. Among the stromal cell-derived factors, we found that rat CXCL12 (CXCL12) was involved in the enhancement of osteogenic differentiation of canine bone marrow-derived stromal cells. Moreover, mRNA expression of Toll-

Weather Center is a superb system tray application that brings you the weather forecast in the System Tray. It can display the current temperature near the clock, the moon phase after sunset and also provide some other useful information on the forecast. It's a native application which means it can run on both 64bit Windows and 32bit Windows operating systems, and it doesn't require any special hardware to be used. Some other features include multiple weather icon sets to choose from, customizable weather fonts and colors and also a fully functional clock with real-time information. To start using Weather Center, simply create a shortcut on your desktop, edit the properties and double-click on it to launch the application. This will put Weather Center as the System Tray icon, although you can simply remove it if you're not satisfied with it. Weather Center will then launch, showing you the current information on the weather. If you click on the tray icon, you'll be given the option to change the font, colors and position of the forecast in the system tray. It can also speak the current time and weather conditions. Unfortunately, unlike other similar applications, Weather Center doesn't have an option to request for administrative privileges, which means that it doesn't ask for permission before using system resources to function. What's more, it's always a good idea to put the tray icon somewhere where it's easily accessible, since you'll be tapping it anytime you're going to check on the forecast. As an alternative, you can also add a quick launch icon in the system menu and place the weather application as the first item. The program doesn't seem to slow down the system even if an Internet connection is used to retrieve the latest weather information, and it's also completely free to use.
