The key combination Ctrl + Alt + Del is a windows shortcut to access the task manager, although it is most likely already open. You may use a computer without a task manager, but this shortcut is used in most situations to launch it. A: It has been a while since I first used Windows 7, but I am fairly certain that the taskbar is simply another way of adding an icon to the list of running applications. If you are having trouble finding programs, I recommend that you look at the add/remove programs for the programs that you are looking to add. Not all of the programs are in the "add/remove programs" window, but there is a much broader selection in the search results. Q: jQuery Load contents into placeholder I'm trying to use jQuery's .load() to load a link (the form data) into the container I want. But I want the content to be inserted into the place that was already there before. The code I'm trying is like this: $(".container").load("" + pageUrl + ""); What I want is to be able to use jquery's .load() function and append the content into the placeholder, but I couldn't find any code that says how to do it. Please help. Thanks! A: You can use the beforeSend callback to append before the content loaded. You should append in the beforeSend callback but even if it is too late to append the content, you can append after the content loaded using the done callback. $(".container").load(pageUrl, function () { $(this).append("Loaded Content"); }); A: As the documentation for .load() says: The .load() method can also be used with a callback function to get data back from the server: So, you can do: $(".container").load("" + pageUrl + "", function(){ $(this).append("Some new content"); }); (Notice the use of 'callback' in the argument list for the.load() function.)
