I had this question on an English test today, and my question is: If the food is fresh, it is good. If the food is fresh, and it is good. The answer given was the second one. But is it correct to write it that way? A: You can certainly have both "and" and "and", but they are often used to show contrast, so you may need to make your sentences more complex to show that contrast. If the food is fresh, it is good. If the food is fresh, and the food is good. If the food is fresh and the food is good. In this case, the word order does not really change the meaning, and they are pretty interchangeable. But the first one sounds better. If the food is fresh, it is good. If the food is fresh, and the food is good. Here, the first sentence sounds a bit stilted, as though the writer is elaborating on the second sentence, and the second sounds a little weird, as though the writer means to start over again in a different sentence. If the food is fresh, and the food is good. If the food is fresh and the food is good. If the food is fresh, good. The last sentence sounds a bit wordy, and the writer may not have intended it to be grammatically correct. It could be fixed, however, by dropping the comma and moving "is good" to the end of the sentence: If the food is fresh, and the food is good. Q: C# Using SQL Parameters in SELECT statement

LanFriends is a free application that helps you find devices on your LAN. The app lets you enter IP addresses, use a search query or load your own list of IPs. You can then view all connected devices, sort them by state, interface, type, etc. A nice feature of this app is the auto-complete that helps you type the IP addresses easily, as if you have a long list of them to type. LanFriends also uses the built-in applications that come with Windows, like My Network Places, to launch the networks that you have to connect to. Reviewers Notes: - You can search for IPs by typing. - You can select the sort criteria (state, interface, type, etc).- The auto-complete feature is a nice way to type IP addresses easily.- You can sort devices by state.  Description: This application will help you find devices on your local area network (LAN) by performing a ping-like operation on the IP addresses of these devices. The IP addresses may be entered by typing in the IP address or by loading a list of IP addresses. You can then sort the devices by state, interface, type, etc. The application will work with any IP address that is valid on the network to which it is connected.
