I am trying to create something similar to the Xbox controller rumble or any sort of "rumble" of the controller, except just for the timer. Is there a way to set up a timer for one second in Unity, and check it's state every second to see if it's running? If the timer is running, then do stuff, if not, do something else? I have been looking into coroutines and I found something called a Timer in Unity5. The problem is that I don't know if it is the right thing to do. A: Coroutines is the way to go. A coroutine is a scripted method which runs repeatedly. Check out this coroutine tutorial. One thing you need to keep in mind is that coroutines are invoked not by Unity but by the rest of your game engine. This means you must integrate with this engine if you want to use coroutines. This coroutine tutorial might also be helpful. of MIP-1β. However, the monocyte/lymphocyte ratio remained unchanged \[[@B5]\]. In addition to an increase of APC-induced CD11c+ MHC-II+ cells, lymphocytes were reduced in the spleen of D-gal/CpG ODN treated mice. B-cells and B-cell derived lymphocytes in the spleen have been reported to be increased in aged mice and CpG ODN were found to enhance B-cell differentiation \[[@B34]\]. It is possible that this reduces the number of CD4+ cells in the aged mouse spleen. Together, the data suggest that there is an age-associated increase in the percentage of macrophages and a decrease in lymphocytes in the aged mouse spleen, even in the absence of bacterial DNA.
