According to The Manchester Evening News, the angry man "used his car to push the teenager on to the floor" before punching him "at least once in the head". "Then he shouted: 'Go back to your country and read the Koran. It will make you a better man." Describing the incident, the newspaper reported that the student had received several injuries, including a broken tooth and split lip. Following the incident, the student, who was not identified, left Britain to return home. Although local police described the incident as a hate crime, the local Imam of the Manchester Central Mosque said that the victim was not a "good Muslim".
