patients with paroxysmal atrial fibrillation (AAF) the course of their cardiologic state and quality of life was assessed according to the Acta-Watch method and a specially developed questionnaire. The following correlations were found out: in the quality of life parameters correlation coefficient (CC) of the general state, working capacity and left-ventricular function, question; CC = 0.847, 0.816, 0.873 resp.; in the Acta-Watch parameters correlation CC to the number of episodes of AAF and AAF episodes/24 h resp.; CC = 0.853, 0.853; in the Acta-Watch parameters CC to the recurrence of AAF and AAF episodes/24 h resp.; CC = 0.850, 0.857, in the Acta-Watch parameters CC to the arrhythmia/24 h resp.; CC = 0.936, 0.936, in the Acta-Watch parameters CC to the efficiency of antiarrhythmic therapy and suppression of AAF episodes/24 h resp.; CC = 0.848, 0.849. It is concluded, that the Acta-Watch is superior in evaluating the efficacy of antiarrhythmic therapy. It is worth while to emphasize that for the patients with AF the CC value is similar, but the values of the Acta-Watch differ considerably from the values of the general state and working capacity. Two-dimensional activity propagation in a model of masticatory muscle. In this work, a two-dimensional model of the masticatory muscle was proposed to examine the contraction propagation that induces masseter muscle forces under submaximal and maximal occlusal loading during swallowing. A finite element model was developed, which was validated by predicting maximal voluntary bite force and electromyography (EMG) signal for healthy adults. The EMG signal was modelled
