The major objective of this study was to determine whether or not there is a molecule on human neutrophils with the characteristics of CD33. Because blood neutrophils in patients with acute myeloid leukemia (AML) have been found to express decreased levels of the CD33 molecule, we sought to determine the levels of this molecule on normal blood neutrophils. Indeed, contrary to the vast majority of the data reported in the literature, we found a significant increase in the expression of the CD33 molecule on freshly isolated blood neutrophils. Furthermore, we found that the expression of this molecule is up-regulated in neutrophils stimulated by a specific stimulus with interferon (IFN)-gamma. Cell treatment with IFN-gamma or a soluble recombinant CD33 protein induced a significant increase in the expression of the CD33 molecule, which is mainly located on the cytoplasm. Using a direct immunofluorescence assay, we detected molecules with a CD33-like immunophenotype, which was characterized by the following features: homogeneity, granulocytic phenotype, specific fixation, enhancement by A23187, calcium-independent phagocytosis, and the absence of the CD14 molecule. Finally, we found that neutrophils with a CD33 immunophenotype carry the AML-specific monoclonal antibodies (MoAbs), such as AK2 and OPD4. Our study demonstrates for the first time that the CD33 molecule is present in normal human blood neutrophils, and that IFN-gamma is involved in the regulation of its expression.Aynur Aynur (, also Romanized as ?yn?r; also known as ?nyur) is a city and capital of Aynur District, in Kazerun County, Fars Province, Iran. The circuit board is typically constructed from a plurality of layers, including an upper surface, a lower surface and a plurality of internal conductive paths therebetween. The conductive paths are typically in the form of a plurality of vias that connect the upper and lower surfaces. Because the vias are metallic in nature, they have a thickness, or diameter, that prevents them from being bent to a very tight radius. Furthermore, due to the high frequency and high current applied to the board in the device, and due to the limited current carrying capacity of the vias, the vias are susceptible to localized overheating and failure. The high current passing through the vias may have a detrimental effect of heating the surrounding dielectric material to a temperature that causes breakdown of the dielectric material, thereby reducing the integrity of the conductive paths. In addition, the high current passing through the vias can cause an increase in contact resistance between the via and the conductive paths. This increase in contact resistance increases conduction path resistance and power loss in the vias. To prevent these drawbacks, the conductive paths of a circuit board are commonly formed using conductive lines on both sides of the board. These lines are preferably bent to increase the current carrying capacity. The higher current carrying capacity provides a desired amount
