Use of the Liquid Rescale tool can wreak havoc on image size if the document is too small. Print a copy of your document and use it as a guide; if the subject matter of your image is more than a few feet, it is a good idea to print the document and enlarge it on the layout program or on your inkjet printer. Carefully select File > Place, and then the Place command on the left side of the palette. You're about to start the Place tool. Select the tool from the toolbox, and then click on a spot on a page to place the image. A preview of the new page appears, and any images below the image you placed appear in red. If you click a thumbnail below the preview, the sheet automatically appears so you can see exactly where the image was placed. You can tell the Place tool has placed an image correctly because it looks like a thumbtack. It's very easy to move the image if you click the little box on the thumbnail to select it; in fact, it's easier than any other method I've found. To resize an image, drag the four corners of the box. Make sure you click the center of the image's thumbnail box to resize the image. If you have placed an image incorrectly, you can see how the box looks in the thumbnail or preview area. The resize box is also very useful for creating new pages. You can use this method to create multiple sizes of the same image. As you create new pages, you can make the size of the page change by resizing the box before you go to the Layers palette and create a new image layer. You also have the option of dragging a box around the area of the image that you'd like to keep, and then hitting the Delete key to remove the unwanted area. Use the crop tool to remove areas of the image that have information you don't want. As with other tools, click the center of the crop box, drag the box to your desired size, and click to remove unwanted information. The UK's climate is changing. According to a recent report by the Met Office, the country is expected to experience more frequent and intense heatwaves in the future, with two-thirds of them being driven by climate change. New research has found that these heatwaves are becoming longer, more intense and more damaging, with this increase in the duration and intensity of heatwaves attributed to climate change. The Met Office also reports that a larger proportion of the UK is expected to experience very high levels of heat-related death, illness and workload, as a result of climate change. Just as worrying is the fact that the data is not collected well enough. Data is patchy and varies by region, making it hard to understand the impact of climate change. This has left the UK at risk of being overtaken by climate change. This has been reflected in the findings of the most recent report from the intergovernmental panel on climate change (IPCC) - which showed that the UK is expected to experience more violent weather. These changes pose a risk to the country and its citizens. The shift in weather is so great that the report says "more frequent, intense, longer and more frequent extreme heat." And as one news report states: "Britain could face more violent and deadly extreme weather, including frequent and heavy downpours, heatwaves and more violent storms as a result of climate change. "The report, the first to link extreme weather to climate change, said there would be a 25% chance of an extra flood, storm or heatwave during the 2016/17 winter due to global warming. "The likelihood of a month-long heatwave that sees record highs for the entire country, two separate floods that take 10 days or more to resolve, and an intense September storm with gusts of about 75mph was increased by 3%, almost one in 10." The warning is significant as the UK is already suffering from a number of heatwaves, including the recent heatwave and drought. The effects of climate change are being seen across the UK. This includes seaside resorts which are drying out and flooding due to rising sea levels and the melting of mountain glaciers. It has been linked to the spread of heat-loving mosquitoes. Most of the new research has been conducted by scientists from the Met Office and other institutes. Dr. Jonathan Powell, lead author from the Met Office explains: "
