Today, Union Station became the world's first major transit hub to run entirely on 100% renewable energy. With an energy generation mix of 58 percent renewable energy and 22.2 percent fossil fuels, the station is a notable step towards a greener future for the nation's third busiest transit hub. "This is a big deal," said Steve Taylor, head of operations for AMT, the rail line that services the station. "It's a symbol of what we've accomplished as a company in the past year and how we're thinking about the future." The ongoing commitment to power the station entirely on renewable energy has been part of a four-year rebrand and major redesign of the station since December 2012. The station is undergoing a multi-million dollar remodeling project that involves construction of a new above-ground concourse, a rooftop solar array, a historic restoration and a major art acquisition fund. These projects are part of the company's "Becoming the Nation's Third Largest Transit Hub" initiative. "The rail system is the best in the world," said the Union Station Revitalization Corporation, the private, nonprofit group that operates the station. "But we can do more if our neighbors – our regional partners and city – are willing to collaborate and be engaged on this issue. This is a great example of how transformational public-private partnerships can be." Union Station serves almost 60 million Amtrak passengers and about 55,000 daily passes and is St. Louis' major gateway to the region. The station is also the headquarters for Amtrak's operations and a major transit hub for Amtrak, Metrolink, Union Pacific, Baltimore-Washington, Chicago-O'Hare, and Canadian Pacific. "We have an important role in the transportation network and we are charged with being a catalyst for this region," said St. Louis Mayor Francis Slay, whose office sits at the station.
