To review the clinical outcomes of the surgical management of acute limb-threatening septic arthritis in children with large defect soft tissue defects. This was a retrospective review of 8 children who underwent large flap debridement for limb-threatening septic arthritis. All patients had at least one site of skin breakdown to at least half of the extent of the upper or lower extremity. In addition, the median duration of prior antibiotic therapy was 14 days (range: 7-42). Median age at time of surgery was 6.0 years (range: 3.1-13.9). Median follow-up was 13.5 months (range: 6-32). All patients underwent debridement and soft tissue reconstruction with a split-thickness skin graft or free microvascular anterolateral thigh flap. Three patients developed superficial wound complications. One patient required further re-debridement. 570a42141b
