Halloween is a time when many of us get to indulge our inner child and splurge on candy we don't really need. But what if you could eat your Halloween candy from the Garden of Eden? If you're a fruit lover, you may have already tried peaches, apples, oranges, lemons, kiwis, pineapples, pears, watermelons, and even bananas. Now you can taste those fruits in a whole new way. Enter Willy Wonka's Chocolate World, a new exhibit at the Montreal Botanical Garden that allows visitors to sample chocolates that, in this case, are grown in a garden. The exhibit, which will be open to the public every day until June 13, includes more than 80 different types of chocolate from around the world, and visitors can buy a chocolate gift package. Story continues below advertisement READ MORE: Chocolate festival brings sweet treats from across Canada Organizers are calling it the world's first oral history of chocolate, but the exhibit is actually a dramatization of what happens inside a chocolate-making factory. At this authentic chocolate factory, visitors can see the preparation of cocoa and its maturation into a solid chocolate mass. They can also learn about the enzymes used 570a42141b
