A virus has been isolated from human lymphocytes that is approximately 10 times the size of a polyomavirus, that is, 67.7 nm in diameter, and has five prominent surface projections of 200 A at right angles. This virus is resistant to both low-temperature inactivation and to removal with 2 M NaCl. The virus is not neutralized by antisera against SV40 or polyomaviruses. The presence of this virus in human serum samples was detected by immunofluorescent staining of a cytolytic virus plaque assay.DESCRIPTION (Applicant's Abstract): The proposed project is designed to increase our understanding of the mechanisms and consequences of stress on the aging brain. Stressful experiences in the early years of life, a period of particular vulnerability, are thought to have long-term effects on the development of neural systems underlying executive and cognitive processes. The proposed research will test the hypothesis that the impact
