I would be glad if you read them and tell me if there are any bugs or if I missed something!

It is in the android application. Name is: Player 1 vs Player 2 You can find me at : thesatan666xoxo Hi I've made a fraction calculator in C++ that is a one to one to BASIC. It also has a few tips on how to help make calculations faster. So i'll try and explain how it works and show a few examples: The right click menu has some options, such as multiplying, dividing, adding and subtracting. The first option is: multiply. This works like multiplying two numbers together: Let's use these numbers: -- -- Number 1 (input) -- Number 2 (input) -- Number 1 (output) -- Number 2 (output) -- Number 1 = 20 Number 2 = 100 Number 1 = 20 Number 2 = 100 Number 1 = 40 Number 2 = 200 Number 1 = 40 Number 2 = 200 Number 1 = 60 Number 2 = 400 Number 1 = 60 Number 2 = 400 Number 1 = 80 Number 2 = 800 Number 1 = 80 Number 2 = 800 Number 1 = 100 Number 2 = 1000 Number 1 = 100 Number 2 = 1000 Number 1 = 120 Number 2 = 1200

2011-06-26 - Starting from this version, I'm using matplotlib to draw charts (and images from the standard libraries), in order to make the interface user-friendly. - Added user and group definitions. - Added some more checks at the loading time, because user could try to run the program as system user (usually Administrator). - Added support for new function `__is_recoverable` in included modules - Changed the way of checking argument validity: if argument is None, the default value is used. If you are using None as default value, you should pass a value - Now, the input of a number in range is possible. - Now, p-values can be calculated without summing the values of its arguments. - Internal constants were reordered for a better reading of the code (this fixes several errors on the function of not allowed code). - Solved a problem of read system user (and group) with some strange values (thanks to Tijmen for reporting this). - Changed the behaviour of the munch function (thanks to Huczpina for reporting this). - Now, the display of a table depends of the name of the data file:
