A low-cut or low-pass filter lets you create the effect of a mime or hiss effect that a machine produces when you pull the tape-out out of the spool. The filter can take the signals of up to five input channels (downmix to mono), and up to four of the signals can be routed to a single output channel. The filter can be used in mono and stereo versions, and the user has to set the cut-off frequency or the bandwidth. Each channel can also be subjected to a low-pass filter. There are a total of 15 different low-pass filter types available, some of them are: A high-pass filter works like a high-cut filter, but without lowering the signal below the cut-off frequency. You can calculate the bandwidth of each low-cut filter by using the formula: Bandwidth = Cutoff / ((Cutoff + 1) / 2). An alias filter is a low-pass filter that has two or more anti-aliasing filters. A crosstalk (Cross-talk) filter works like a low-pass filter with an anti-aliasing crosstalk filter. There are also a multiple effect version, and an effect that reduces clicks. An option is to define the behaviour of the effect by defining two parameters: slope and threshold. Slope indicates the distance at which the filter starts to work. Threshold indicates the amplitude below which the filter starts to work. Two or more parameters can be set to a constant value. The maximum number of signal channels that can be routed to an effect is limited. However, the number can be extended by assigning a new macro to an effect. KEYMACRO is a fully-featured audio multi-instrument and effects rack for Native Instruments Kontakt. Included with it is a feature-rich set of effects and sounds, as well as MIDI mappings that connect them to instrument controllers. Most essential to the versatility of the software is a MIDI mapping plugin so that it can be connected to a MIDI controller (e.g. a keyboard) and manipulated and then exported back to Kontakt via a MIDI file. KeyMACRO allows for a range of versatility in use, with a number of devices to allow you to control different devices and effects with a single controller. KeyMACRO offers two different tiers of MIDI mapping: Feature Mapping: This allows you to control your device(s) directly from your keyboard.

There are two different modes of operation: 1: To control your device(s) via MIDI sequencing, where you can record the entire controller sequence and play it back like you are performing a performance. 2: To control your device(s) with a mouse and not be tied to the keyboard or MIDI controller. This mode is perfect for use when performing and not limited to just sequencing. Device Control: Using this mode, you can map your device(s) to a MIDI controller. Using the Kontakt Player window, it will load the device mapping script and map that controller to that device. The Device Control window allows you to map as many devices as you wish, or you can be forced to use all your controllers by assigning a device to each controller in the drop down menu. Effect Control: By default, the Kontakt Player window will assign an effect control to any instrument. This can be changed to any MIDI controller. In addition, the Kontakt Player window can be used to set/clear the currently active controller. Using the control strip you can also assign the currently active controller to any MIDI control. Features include: * Over 60 effects to choose from, with 9 of these specifically designed to be used with Kontakt. * 9 different Instrument Racks, 6 of which are instrument-specific. * You can connect a host of devices, from a pad to an FX-Able Drum Pad, a string synth, a keyboard, a bass and everything in between. * 4 different Mixers (overlays), which provide a wide range of versatility. * 5 different 1d6a3396d6
