Here is my question, I have one DVD which has several video files (.avi, vob, mkv) After I uncompress it with several tools, I obtain files which are Iso "compressed" but I can play it with VLC Is there a tool or a method that will convert it as an.iso? (Like a burning program, not ISO3211 but in text format) A: I have used Handbrake to do this for TV shows, but it can be done manually as well: Open the DVD in VLC Select File -> Open Device... In the New Window that opens, paste the VOB (Video Object) files or avi files into the Find File... input. In the Format radio buttons, select "Best" or "Auto" (if you aren't sure). In the Video Settings input, paste the path to your ISO file. Select OK and press 'w' (the DVD should then be "converted" and you should be able to play your DVD in VLC as an ISO image. If you want to preserve the name of the DVD, you can save the ISO file as something other than an ISO, such as a.img. If you want to set the ISO as the default output for a disc burning, you can add the following to your `~/.vlc/list.xml` file (after the definition of the path to the ISO file):

disc The file path to your VOB files can be downloaded here. The VOB files should be in a.obf (object-based format) file, and you can get them by copying the.sgb file from the DVD. Actor Gemma Chan has accused the BBC of bullying her after it forced her to leave a film set in Dubai because of her political activism. Chan was called in by the BBC to carry out a scene for a short film being made for the BBC Storyville series. She was told during pre-production that she could be sent home because her views on education reform in the UK posed a conflict of interest.
