The apartheid regime in South Africa was one of the worst in modern human history, and it remains a favourite comparison of the critics of the Irish government's position in Northern Ireland. The apartheid regime was far more brutal than the British government's brutal treatment of the four million Irish people as well as the 16,000 people deported from Ireland to the continent during the 1920s and 30s (a process that involved the government's full support and participation). Yet the British state was entirely comfortable with the violence, and often expressed a certain admiration for the tactics of the British army in Ireland and elsewhere. Similar views were expressed by the then British Prime Minister, Neville Chamberlain, in 1921. On the night of the First World War the Germans had occupied the Low Countries and invaded Belgium, which formed part of a larger so-called 'incursion' into French and British territory. The French government fell in the early months of the war and the French army was defeated. The shock led to the disintegration of the empire and the fall of the Austrian-Hungarian and Ottoman empires. Germany, Italy, Turkey, Romania and Bulgaria were left as the League of Nations empires in the aftermath of the First World War. But the British government had recently been drawn into two further wars, against the Irish Republic and in South Africa, and the 82138339de
