9. Introduction to Microsoft Loader by Daz v.2.1.4 What if you need to load Windows on a system that's really * not bootable? My name is Daz and I am the developer of Windows Loader . I am also the developer of the experimental loader. The loader allows you to install Windows on computers that don't support boot sector repair that is; computers that cannot boot Windows XP or Windows Vista. A system that can't boot Windows XP or Windows Vista is not bootable. If you need to load Windows on such a computer then you need to boot it from something else such as the Windows DVD. You then need to run Windows Loader. Windows Loader loads the boot sector of Windows 7. Then Windows Loader will install the Windows 7 loader and exit. You will be prompted by Windows Loader to reboot. You can then continue with the installation of Windows. * After Windows 7 is installed you can then install the experimental loader. In the same way as above, Windows Loader installs the experimental loader and exits. * Both the WinXP and Vista loaders require that the boot sector of Windows 7 be installed before installing either of them. * To use the experimental loader you will need to have the Windows 7 loader installed. * Both the loader and the experimental loader will be installed as REFSYS hidden sectors. * The experimental loader uses a different system call to boot Windows 7. If you attempt to boot Windows 7 from one of the experimental loaders that have been patched to use the same system call than you will not be able to boot Windows 7. The key difference between the experimental loader and the Windows 7 loader is that the experimental loader is not limited to systems that are supported by boot sector repair. The experimental loader also supports the loading of Windows 7 on systems that do not have a hard drive or floppy drive. It is however, not recommended that you use the experimental loader. It has not been tested extensively and can potentially cause problems. Please be aware that I do not support any kind of illegal activity and if you download a loader or experiment loader that you are warned against you can be reported to the FBI. Enjoy.
