* Windows and Macintosh : The Macintosh and Windows versions have a little in common, but are different enough to each other that they require a separate comparison. In Windows, Photoshop includes two interface areas: the main screen and a workspace. The main screen is where you edit the image, and the workspace is where you enter commands to change something in the image. Each window includes dozens of tool palettes with tools for a specific task.

You are here Dale Frost: our thinking muddies the waters By DALE FROST In some cases, thinking muddies the waters. You have heard the expression many times: "Actions speak louder than words." Not always. Sure, when politicians and other public figures have done little but talk, talk, talk, most of us begin to wonder whether they are capable of doing something. I recently heard Dr. Orson Scott Card make an interesting comment in a lecture he was giving. The talk was on a book he wrote: "Into a Dark Place," about his life growing up as a Mormon in the late 1960s. It was an interesting talk, and I didn't want to miss a word. At the end of the lecture, however, Dr. Card referenced a scene from the book and said, "It just made me wonder what I'd do if I were the villain of my own novel. Not that I'd do it, of course, but would I be able to finish it, knowing that those were my own thoughts and intentions?" Yes, I thought, knowing that cardiologist's heart muscle in mine. But there are instances when thinking doesn't muddy the waters at all. The most recent example was when "living as a question mark" was used in an opinion piece written by Iowa state Rep. Joanne Townsend. The author didn't ask, "How are we going to fix this?" But rather, "What can we do?" Those two questions — fixing and what to do — are not the same thing. Townsend was referring to her efforts to make sure state Medicaid payments were adequate to what it costs to house people who are mentally ill. (I am happy to say her efforts were successful.) The key is to not worry about fixing things and being paralyzed by possible failure. Making the things done is the only way to know whether they are the right thing to be done. Townsend used the expression: "I will be here to be the question mark." However, if we are out on the road trying to fix things, we will almost certainly make mistakes that will leave us wondering what we did wrong. In years past, it was not uncommon to hear a president, such as Lyndon Johnson, talk about "getting things done." He'd hit a button on the telephone, and his staff would be summoned to
