You can use the default user interface of the interface for editing, but you can also use the developer's interface (IDE), which allows you to carry out a range of operations in a much more detailed way. Interface for editing and output There are two ways to deal with your dvcSWF-FFMpeg project. You can edit the original project from the Flash FLA file that is a working file, or you can export the movie clip to an SWF file, and then edit it using the FLA editor. The output of the project depends on what you want to make, and which tools you use for editing. If you use the default interface, the final movie will be presented in FLV format (or MXF), with no sound (MP3 is compatible with the SWF format). In the case of the developer's interface, you can choose the target of the final output by specifying the movie file format you want dvcSWF-FFMpeg to save it to; you can choose a language from a list of available languages, and can also add settings for the video. Three-way trimming dvcSWF-FFMpeg can be used to trim the video in three ways. You can trim the beginning of the movie, the end of the clip, or to cut out clips (excess). For each trimming setting, dvcSWF-FFMpeg will allow you to create an object containing an additional icon that is used to identify the current feature.
