Few studies have analysed the effect of a fixed or a flexible implant to the long-term survival of a single implant. To compare the implant survival rate of a single conical, tapered implant between a fixed implant and a flexible implant. Retrospective clinical study. Tertiary University Hospital. A total of 159 patients were treated in two private practice centres using the same implant system; a fractured femoral neck implant was reconstructed by a flexible implant in 85 patients, and a fractured femoral neck implant was reconstructed by a fixed implant in 74 patients. The implant was fixed or flexible at the time of the initial implantation. Survival rate with revision surgeries to the femoral head for any reason (fracture, aseptic loosening, infection and other complications). The cumulative revision rate over time was calculated. The implant survival rate at 5 years was 81.1% (95% confidence interval (CI) 72.7-88.2%) for the flexible implant, compared to 90.3% (95% CI 84.0-94.7%) for the fixed implant, P = 0.084. The implant survival rate at 10 years was 78.4% (95% CI 69.2-85.6%) for the flexible implant, compared to 90.0% (95% CI 83.4-94.5%) for the fixed implant, P = 0.027. The implant survival rate for the flexible implant was better in patients aged 60 years or older and in patients who had had previous hip surgery, compared to patients who had had no previous hip surgery. More revision surgeries were performed on the flexible implant than on the fixed implant at 5 and 10 years. A flexible implant did not have a lower implant survival
