“Our enhanced ball physics engine developed for FIFA 17 returns for FIFA 22, making the ball react and behave more like a real ball,” said John Saflick, EA's CTO. “With FIFA 22 we are also introducing the new HyperMotion Technology to bring the ball to life through player animations – even during the most heated encounters.” To bring the system to life, players will be able to slow down the ball down by any of the following methods: dribbling past an opponent with the ball, passing with a non-honed foot, or by running with the ball. Players can also launch forward to speed up the pace of the football. “We saw in FIFA 17 players could fake out the ball by speeding up, slowing down or stopping the movement of the ball with their hands or feet,” said Saflick. “We worked with the player community to help improve this section of the game and you can now also launch forward to speed up the pace of the football.” Also new in FIFA 22 are the refined player animations, player movements and ball physics, a new match engine, customization and an improved Ultimate Team feature. FIFA Ultimate Team is a fast-paced, competitive online card game mode where fans accumulate and build their own roster of real-life players, and then use these players to earn virtual points to earn cards and battle for global rankings. FIFA 22 features 12 playable national teams with detailed player models, authentic kits and uniforms, and historic substitutions, including player models with facial hair and injuries. The game will also include a revised UEFA Champions League and UEFA Europa League, featuring select teams, and a new UEFA Nations League. New gameplay innovations include: Improved Player Movement. In FIFA, when a player makes a movement, the ball moves. Now, when a player moves, the ball can also move. This means defenders can no longer stand and watch players moving away from them, and that players can no longer stand perfectly still – allowing them to be tracked by off-ball players more easily. Players will react more realistically to the opponent and defenders when they make a movement – in addition to being able to defend with more speed and intensity. New Hybrid Goalkeeper Model. This year, EA SPORTS have introduced a brand new goalkeeper mechanic. The goalkeeper and the goalposts will react to your shots in a new, natural-feeling way.
