Roblox is a sandbox construction game in which players can use virtual reality headsets or desktop computers to build, play, and share with other people. Players use a toolbox to construct 3D fantasy islands, and an in-game currency, Robux, can be used to buy items with real world currency. Roblox provides an online virtual world called the "Builders Club", which acts as an online social network, game, and building tool. It allows users to build games, create games, and connect to other players. Players can join the Builders Club for free and invite friends to join them. Once users join the Builders Club, they can access the BEC (Builders Edit Mode), which contains a toolbox of digital building blocks, and the BHUB (Builder HUD) that users can drag blocks onto to build custom structures and play their own creations. Players also have access to a subreddit where they can discuss and view gameplay videos, user art, and build ideas for new games. With the Robux game currency, users can purchase items in the Roblox catalog such as building blocks, furniture, accessories, customization items, vehicles, weapons, clothing, and pets. Robux is also used for games in the Roblox catalogue. Robux can be earned through the game or paid for with real-world money. Users can also earn Robux by watching advertisements or playing games. The Robux game currency can be transferred from one user to another, and Roblox is free to use. The Builders Club contains a virtual marketplace called "Builders Market", which acts as an in-game store where players can sell their creations, just like in-game players on other game platforms such as Minecraft. The Builders Market is a virtual store where users can purchase objects and services that they can use to construct buildings and themes in the game. Roblox's virtual items can be transferred to other players. Developers can sell items in the Roblox catalog for real money, but they cannot use real money to purchase items from other players. Roblox is a free to play game, but users can pay for premium services. These services include the in-game ability to earn and spend Robux, upload custom avatar items, access the Builders Club premium features, and more.
